

Stars descend upon hot design fair

By Ian Mohr

March 10, 2018 | 4:54pm

Chloë Sevigny

Getty Images

Frank Ocean, Chloe Sevigny and Julianne Moore were among stars perusing the opening of Collective Design -- the buzzy, high-end contemporary contemporary-design fair that moved its dates to coincide with Armory Arts Week.

We hear crooner Ocean was checking out a booth run by Galerie Michael Bargo.

Calvin Klein designer Raf Simons was chatting with hot young architect and designer Harry Nuriev about his new work -- inspired by the Russian council flat where he grew up.

The Belgian fashion guru later checked out a booth from Maison Gerard. Also at Skylight Clarkson North for the fair, founded by Steven Learner, were "Dexter" star Michael C. Hall, former Diesel artistic director Nicola Formichetti and Visionaire co-founder Cecilia Dean, we hear.

Highlights included booths from hot Brooklyn-based design firm Billy Cotton and Studio Giancarlo Valle as well as hip Meatpacking District gallery Fort Gansevoort, which presented an installation by Sam Stewart. Reunion Goods & Services created a chic 1960s-inspired café at the fair that runs through Sunday.